WOUNDED WARRIOR PROJECT COMMEMORATES 10TH ANNIVERSARY WITH THE COMPELLING DOCU-SERIES ‘WOUNDED: THE BATTLE BACK HOME’

The Series Debuts Sunday, November 10 at Noon ET / 9:00 AM PT
As Part of MSNBC’s “Taking the Hill”

Jacksonville, FL – November 07, 2013 – To commemorate the 10th anniversary of Wounded Warrior Project (WWP), the non-profit organization will debut “Wounded: The Battle Back Home,” a documentary film series that focuses on issues of critical importance to this generation of Wounded Warriors and their families through personal stories of struggle and resiliency. Created and produced with Austin-based agency Flow Nonfiction, the series will launch Sunday, November 10, 2013 as part of special Veteran’s Day programming on “Taking the Hill” on MSNBC, with additional episodes airing over the course of the coming year on the cable news channel.

The first installment in the series, titled “Shane,” centers on Marine service member, Shane Krutchen, who returned from Iraq seeking help with his nightmares. Krutchen immediately felt ostracized and was discharged to a Veteran Affairs health facility with little understanding of post-traumatic stress disorder. Krutchen’s spiral led to a drug addiction and suicide attempt in 2009, but his connection with Wounded Warrior Project and a fellow Wounded Warrior helped him get clean and discover that mixed martial arts (MMA) was just the medicine he needed. Wounded: The Battle Back Home follows Krutchen, now married and expecting a child, days before a professional MMA fight as he prepares for a dramatic victory and the opportunity to honor 19 friends and fellow soldiers he lost in combat.
