Financial health is a key indicator of quality of life, as it is intrinsically connected to mental, physical, and psychological well-being. According to the 2021 Wounded Warrior Project® (WWP) Annual Warrior Survey, more than two in every five warriors (42 percent) that WWP serves indicated financial strain. WWP serves post-9/11 wounded, ill, and injured warriors and their families through individualized career counseling, financial education, and benefits assistance.

To further augment these services, WWP invests in partners that empower service members and veterans to achieve their fullest potential. These programs and services include entrepreneurship training, transition and employment coaching, benefits counseling, transitional housing, emergency financial aid, and many more interventions that address both the immediate and underlying causes of economic insecurity. Partner programs range from cohort-based fellowships to those that offer community-centered wraparound services that focus on direct case management, addressing substance use, and supporting the development of behaviors, attitudes, and values of healthy living.
