In September of 2010, Yomari Cruz deployed to Afghanistan, proud of herself and her decision to join the Army. “It gives you a sense of pride and purpose. I was able to realize that I was a lot stronger than what I thought and I felt so proud”, she says. But not 10 minutes after getting off the aircraft in Jalalabad, the base was attacked and those good feelings were replaced with intense fear. “Sirens were going off and I was trying to find cover. It was insane. I was terrified,” says Yomari. While Yomari loved her job, the constant attacks, the loss of her military brothers and sisters, and other traumatic experiences took her to a dark place. Things only got worse after a soldier she trusted was caught videotaping her in the shower on base. As a result, the trust she’d had in her battle buddies eroded, and betrayal, fear, and paranoia overwhelmed her. Always on edge, she couldn’t sleep more than an hour a night.

When Yomari medically retired in 2012, post-traumatic stress made her transition to civilian life very difficult. She had serious anger issues, feared public areas, and couldn’t handle conversations with people. She wouldn’t leave her house. Most of her relationships with friends and family disintegrated. “You just lose everyone. They don’t understand why you’re different, why you’re so defensive and angry,” says Yomari.

Everything changed when a fellow veteran took her to a Wounded Warrior Project® (WWP) event. For the first time in more than three years, she felt comfortable. She saw other warriors behave like she did when they realized into a new place or were in a crowd, and she realized there were other people who understood what she had gone through – and cared. Since then, she has participated in many WWP events, including Soldier Ride® and Project Odyssey®, which Yomari credits as one of the best experiences she has ever had. “You feel like you have a support system and you become like a close family,” says Yomari. “All of the walls go down. Then, all of a sudden, it became more about how I could make others feel comfortable and support them.” That revelation has helped Yomari find a new purpose — helping other warriors. She volunteers with WWP as a warrior leader, organizing local events and helping her fellow veterans connect with one another. “Seeing the veterans’ faces at the events and knowing how grateful they are is something that is definitely rewarding,” says Yomari.

Since the COVID-19 pandemic began, Yomari has continued to find her support system through virtual interactions with other warriors. She says, “As we are confined to our homes, we find ourselves rethinking, which can become unhealthy and affect our PTSD. “When I came across the WWP virtual interactions via Facebook, it brought that human connection daily, which I was grateful for.”

“Thank you, WWP, for being so innovative and creative, and allowing us to have an outlet to be able to connect and keep that human interaction. You guys are always there for us.” — YOMARI CRUZ
As Americans, it is our national responsibility to ensure wounded warriors receive the support they have earned and deserve. Wounded Warrior Project exists to fulfill this promise. Since 2003, we have been tireless advocates for our nation’s bravest, improving the lives of millions of warriors and their families.

Through our free programs and services in mental and physical health, career and benefits counseling, and long-term rehabilitative care, wounded warriors are finding the resources they need to overcome the obstacles in their recoveries.

Wounded warriors battling the mental and physical wounds of war were particularly affected by COVID-19, and we quickly adapted to a virtual programming model to continue to meet their needs. Thankfully, with the support of our donors, we continue to find innovative and impactful ways to deliver our services to warriors and families—supporting them during this incredibly difficult time and even reaching groups of warriors virtually who previously had difficulties attending in-person events.

While we are working diligently to fulfill our mission through these troubling times, the needs of those we serve remain great and are growing. As we plan for the future, we continue to look ahead to where their needs will be and where we must focus our support in this ever-changing environment. But we simply cannot do it alone.

We’re only able to provide life-changing support to those we serve because of generous donors, supporters, and partners—patriots like you—who believe just as passionately in the work we have set out to do. What a powerful thing it is to witness when individuals and organizations come out in full support of those who serve!

As you’ll read within this report, your contributions are changing and saving lives every day—and for that, we are eternally grateful.

Sincerely,

[signature]

To honor and empower wounded warriors.

To foster the most successful, well-adjusted generation of wounded service members in our nation’s history.

MISSION

About WWP

Wounded Warrior Project (WWP) began in 2003 as a small grassroots effort providing simple care and comfort items to the hospital bedside of the first wounded service members returning home from the conflicts in Iraq and Afghanistan. As their post-service needs evolved, so have our programs and services. Today, through our direct programs in mental health, career counseling, and long-term rehabilitative care, along with our advocacy efforts, we improve the lives of millions of warriors and their families.

This effort requires the passion and commitment of friends, supporters, and like-minded organizations that enable us to fulfill our mission. With their collaboration and support, we strive to ensure that when those who serve come home, they’re afforded every opportunity to be as successful as a civilian as they were in the military.

When the pandemic started, there were immediate concerns about isolation and other mental health issues. WWP teammates called nearly 40,000 warriors and family members directly to check in on them. Of those who needed additional assistance, 41% were referred to connection programs, which gave warriors and their families opportunities to virtually engage with peers and WWP.

For the warriors battling mental and physical wounds from their service to our country, the compounded effects of the COVID-19 pandemic, social distancing, and economic hardships have proven especially difficult. Thanks to our generous supporters, WWP has been able to help them through it all, meeting their rapidly changing needs during this crisis.

2020: Now more than ever, we stand ready to serve

Of those who needed additional assistance, 41% were referred to connection programs, which gave warriors and their families opportunities to virtually engage with peers and WWP.

As the nation’s businesses began to shut down last spring, we recognized that many warriors were suffering from a loss of income and experiencing financial hardships due to COVID-19. We moved quickly to provide necessary assistance to more than 11,000 warriors in financial crisis to help provide basic expenses like food and shelter.

To provide additional respite and support to caregivers during these challenging times, WWP committed to investing more than $7 million in a caregiver relief initiative, beginning in FY20. This initiative provided direct grants for caregivers in WWP’s Independence Program, additional support for caregivers, and 35,000 hours of relief to caregivers nationwide in partnership with the Elizabeth Dole Foundation.

COVID-19 EFFECT ON WARRIORS

In an uncertain time that was a struggle for so many, our loyal supporters not only showed up for our nation’s bravest, but they found new ways to engage with wounded warriors and their families.

ENTERTAINMENT

When in-person events were canceled nationwide, many entertainers used their platforms to recognize organizations close to their hearts. NFL athletes Jimmy Graham, a Chicago Bears tight end, and Golden Tate, a New York Giants wide receiver, connected with warriors for virtual Q&A sessions and thanked them for their service. Wounded warrior James Martin said, “When I have days that it’s tough to get up in the morning, it definitely helps me knowing there are guys out there who really do care about us.”

In a time when we were longing for personal connection, two NFL icons surprised wounded warriors with virtual meet-and-greets.

PEER-TO-PEER FUNDRAISING

Over the summer, two country music stars raised funds and awareness for wounded warriors and their families by hosting virtual concerts. In June, Luke Combs took over WWP’s Facebook page for a livestream performance to support our nation’s bravest, and Brantley Gilbert hosted a live virtual concert to bring attention to Suicide Prevention Awareness Month in September.

The Wounded Warrior Project® Carry Forward® 5K looked different this year, as all the events transitioned from in-person events to completely virtual. Patriotic supporters in all 50 states rallied their communities to walk or run to show their support and raise funds for wounded warriors and their families. With a new event app, Carry Forward participants were able to engage with other supporters across the country.

During a time when we were isolated at home, fundraising became a way for our supporters to connect with each other and continue to raise critical funds for wounded warriors and their families.

PROJECT ADOVACY

In February 2020, 26 wounded warriors flew into Washington, DC, from all over the nation to meet with members of Congress and their staffs. Operation Advocacy gives warriors a direct voice with their elected officials, and an opportunity to be at the center of the process of advocating for themselves and their brothers and sisters in arms. Wounded soldiers and WWP staff conducted 40 meetings, discussing WWP’s top legislative priorities — toxic exposure, mental health, and women veterans. Wounded soldiers also shared the challenges they faced during recovery from their injury and transition to civilian life. By speaking with warriors, members of Congress and their staff not only gained a valuable perspective on these critical issues, but they were able to discuss solutions.

These wounded soldiers also attended a joint hearing of the Senate and House Veterans Affairs and Armed Services committees, where WWP CEO Lt. Gen. (Ret.) Mike Linnington discussed WWP’s top legislative priorities for 2020.

FY20 Highlight: Ryan Kules and Paul Benne Specially Adaptive Housing Improvement Act of 2019

The Ryan Kules and Paul Benne Specially Adaptive Housing (SAH) Improvement Act of 2019 was formally passed and reinstates SAH benefits to eligible veterans every 10 years to accommodate moving and normal life changes. “I’m honored to have played a role in the passage of this important law,” said Ryan Kules, WWP combat stress recovery director. “Wounded veterans should have the peace of mind knowing wherever we choose to live, we will have that opportunity without bearing large additional financial burdens for home adaptations. I’m thankful for all who helped make this critical reform become a reality.”

In an uncertain time that was a struggle for so many, our loyal supporters not only showed up for our nation’s bravest, but they found new ways to engage with wounded warriors and their families.
